Course description and learning outcomes

The Chinese economy experienced great human-made disasters during Mao's era but has achieved a spectacular success after 1978 when reform started. China currently is the second largest economy in the world, transforming from a poor, rural, command economy to a global industrial power and to an upper middle income country. While China is still the largest manufacturer and exporter in the world but it also suffers from severe environmental deterioration, social and political problems such as rising income inequality, capital flight, slowing lacking rule of law and protection of property rights. These factors cause the economic growth to slow down recently. This course will provide students with a comprehensive knowledge and fundamental understanding of the contemporary Chinese economy, from its history, the reform since 1978, the economic growth and the relevance to the world. The course will also engage the students with research and discussion over China's future problems including debt problems, financial fragility, RMB globalization, demographic structure, sustainability of growth, system barriers, etc.

Group project/presentation

Students will form groups to conduct research on a topic of the modern Chinese economy, submit a background paper and give a ppt presentation based on their research. Using some quantitative approaches including econometrics or CGE to conduct analysis are encouraged. Each group will choose a topic from a list given by the instructor. Each group consists of 4 students or less.

Project assignment is due on April 4th and the presentation will be scheduled right afterwards.
