

The Chinese University of Hong Kong
Department of Economics

ECON3320
Asia-Pacific Economies
2nd Term 2022 – 2023

Course Objective

This course focuses on the experience of Asian economies, especially their growth and economic development with respect to some economic theories and models. A general survey will be on groups of economies in the Asia-Pacific region. Discussions will be on drivers of economic growth (accumulation of factors of production (savings and investment), productivity (technology and efficiency)), recent economic developments, challenges facing like aging population, middle-income trap, and financial issues by lessons of the two crises in 1997 and 2008.

Learning Outcome

After completion of the course, students are expected to:

- have a better understanding of the Asian growth and development experience
- capable of identifying contemporary problems in the region, analyzing the issues and evaluating implemented/implementing policies critically
